When Día de Los Muertos was coming, my mamita would get ready for Día de Los Muertos just like the abuelas did. She said that our ancestors came down & shared the ofrendas we put on the altar.

We're going to get ready for our gente Alejandro. Mmmm... I can hardly wait...making sugar skulls tomorrow.

- Papel Picado
- Sugar Skulls
- Sempasuchitl
- Tamales
- Mole
- Champurrado
- Kopal
- Sal y Agua
- Música y más

My Tias in San Pablito make papel picado out of AMATE! A Mexican paper made out of the bark of the Jonote tree. They're Otomi and I help them make it when I go to Puebla. They make it just like my antepasados have made it for thousands of years before the Spanish came.

That's why lots of things we use for Día de Los Muertos are from los Indigenos. Like these...

Now that I'm older, my mami & puppy have passed, & I miss them so much. But during these days it feels good to prepare for them and have them so close.

I love making an altar for my familia, even Alejandro has a little huesito. My favorite saint is El Santo Niño de Atocha (Elegua). Probably cause he's a kid like me.
